Corinthian Collection debuts

Gaia Real Estate announced the unveiling of The Corinthian Collection by Andrés Escobar and the completion of the first model residence.

The Corinthian Collection is a group of 144 residences within The Corinthian Condominium, the 57-story multi-curved-facade building in Murray Hill.

Situated on East 38th Street and First Avenue, The Corinthian is blocks from the Chrysler Building, New York Public Library and the United Nations.

The development team tapped the Escobar to modernize the residences and all of the building's interior hallways.

"With its unique shape, The Corinthian offers 180 degree views from every apartment, and with brand new amenities and hallways upgrades, Escobar has created attainable luxury living, surrounded by some of the city's most distinguished landmarks in the heart of Murray Hill," said Danny Fishman, managing partner, Gaia Real Estate.

"It's as if the Corinthian Collection is a new development within a larger standing structure, with residents having access to the newly upgraded amenities and common areas."

The Corinthian's full floor amenity level on the 4th floor includes a 17,000 s/f space with glass-enclosed pool, gym, golf simulator, children's playroom and common area.

Outside, residents are privy to a quarter-mile jogging track and outdoor jungle gym.

Residences can be purchased as renovated or unrenovated spaces, with prices ranging from $925,000 to $4.7 million, for studios to four bedroom homes.

Park River Properties is the exclusive sales and marketing agent for The Corinthian Collection.
